Physiology of Vision

- Light enters eye along visual axis
- Pupil and lens accommodate
- Light is refracted: cornea, aqueous humor, lens, vitreous body
- An inverted image is projected onto retina
- Photoreceptors are stimulated
- Visual pathways distribute information from each eye to the visual cortex of both cerebral hemispheres